It combines an innovative system of automatic news dissemination based on RSS and a news archive function: it will keep a list of the web sites you can subscribe to (currently more than 20000), and you will receive immediately all updates of theses web sites without you having to go to each site for that information."Leptospira is a genus of bacteria species under the pathogen category, that cause a broad range of infections from mild to severe diseases in humans and animals. Diseases caused by Leptospira infections include Weil's disease, and leptospirosis. Human and animal leptospirosis is an infection that is most common in tropical and subtropical regions, but has also been described in temperate zones. The majority of the cases are sporadic, with only a few cases of severe epidemics occurring. In some areas of the world, however, endemic or epidemic leptospirosis occurs. The major sources of exposure for human infection are through occupational or recreational contact with contaminated water or soil or via direct contact with animals. Animals are primary reservoirs for Leptospira, and leptospirosis is also a recognized occupational disease of animal farmers. Human leptospirosis may present as acute febrile illness or as subclinical infection, with the latter being an important reservoir of infection. Symptoms of the more severe forms of leptospirosis include jaundice, hemorrhage, and renal failure. Leptospirosis is a spirochetal infection that is acquired through contact with water or soil contaminated by the urine of an infected animal. Humans and animals may also be infected through contact with animal products such as milk, and other mucous membrane tissues. The disease is widespread in the tropical and subtropical regions of the world, with the highest prevalence being in developing nations. Hundreds of thousands of cases and a number of deaths occur in the Americas, South Asia, and Africa every year. Cases are reported in all continents, except Antarctica and Australia. Leptospirosis was, until the 1980's, the most frequent cause of Weil's disease and an important occupational disease in livestock farmers. Although many countries have strengthened their control programs, Leptospira species remain a global problem. Leptospira are Gram-negative, non-motile, spiral shaped bacteria that are relatively small, ranging in size from 0.5 to 1.5 μ b7e8fdf5c8
